Calls To Reduce The Aussie PMC

Tourism and travel lobbyists are calling for a freeze or reduction of Australia's Passenger Movement Charge (PMC), a fee which an Air New Zealand spokesman once called 'the single biggest risk on Tasman travel for the [then] new financial year'.

The Aussie Government currently applies an AUD55 PMC on passengers departing by plane or cruise ship. As the annual revenue generated from the PMC looks set to reach the AUD1 billion mark for the first time, Australia's Tourism and Transport Forum is calling for a freeze or reduction of the fee, which it says could start to impact travel to and from Australia.

"There is only one direction in which the holiday tax should be headed and that is down," says a TTF spokesman. Australian Federation Travel Association boss Jayson Westbury has also waded in to the fray, as data suggests the revenue generated by the PMC has increased to around four times the AUD247 million it costs to provide the border services. "The PMC is one of the worst over-collected taxation measures that the [Australian] Federal Government has in place..." says Westbury. "If the truth was told the PMC is in fact a travel tax and one of the highest in the world. Given the massive over-collection Australians should be able to expect the world's best experience on departing and arriving at international airports..."

While Westbury is joining the call to freeze the PMC at AUD55 he says 'quite frankly' the PMC should be reduced to a level that's consistent with the actual cost of passenger movement 'or change its name to the Travel Tax which is what it clearly has become'.

... Home Front

On the Kiwi front, Westbury is hoping that the New Zealand Government keeps 'the border levy if they must as a cost recovery levy and not turn it into a travel tax'.

TAANZ chief executive Andrew Olsen is keeping a close eye on the matter, and says if the PMC cost continues to increase, as it has done since its introduction in 2004, 'it will no doubt impact the discretionary holiday funds of the average Kiwi'. "Whilst TAANZ is not a fan of the New Zealand Border Clearance Levy we have managed to have some regulators built in to provide public and industry scrutiny on the cost of clearance," says Olsen, who is supporting the Aussie tourism and travel lobby group's calls to freeze or reduce the PMC level.

Air NZ has in the past expressed concern about the impact of the rising PMC on the price-sensitive Tasman market. "Relative to the average fare, the impact for the Tasman is disproportionate," NZ's Cam Wallace said when the PMC was increased to AUD50 back in 2012.

Public Wi-Fi Warning

A journalist who had his Wi-Fi hacked while checking his emails on a flight has written a column urging fellow flyers—and anyone using public Wi-Fi systems—to be cautious.

The hacker accessed the journalist's emails during the flight, then approached him afterwards to warn him about how easy it was. The journalist has since written a piece for USA Today urging people to be wary when using public Wi-Fi—including looking out for fake Wi-Fi hotspots. Anyone trying to send sensitive information over public Wi-Fi should use a virtual private network (VPN) to protect their data, say experts.

Bachelors Behave Badly

In what sounds like the making of the next Hangover movie, a bachelor party heading from London to Slovakia were reportedly kicked off the aircraft in Germany after behaving badly on the flight. The Ryanair flight made the unscheduled landing to remove the six rowdy Brits, one of whom apparently decided to get naked during the flight. They'll face fines of up to EUR25,000 each, as well as civil claims from the airline.

Langham For Sale

The Langham Auckland, New Zealand's second largest hotel, has been put up for sale in what's being billed as 'one of Auckland's strongest real estate opportunities in years'. CBRE Hotels has opened an international expressions of interest campaign for the property and is expecting 'fierce competition', saying the sale presents a rare opportunity. "Firstly, it is a superb, large five star hotel in a market that has very few of them. Secondly, it is sits at the gateway into a booming tourist market. Thirdly, very few five star New Zealand hotels are offered to the market, and hotels of this size, quality and location come to the market only on a decade by decade basis, if ever. And, finally, it occupies an under-utilised site, so development potential also exists," says CBRE's Warren Hutt.

Aussie Cruise Value Continues To Grow

The value of cruising in Australia is continuing to surge, with a new report showing that swelling passenger numbers and an increase in homeported ships helped to drive the industry's economic contribution to a record AUD3.6 billion in 2014-15.

Commissioned by Cruise Lines International Association Australasia, the report reveals that the economic value of cruising has risen 11.6% since 2013; and that the number of calls by homeported ships increased by 8.3% in the 2014-15 financial year, compared to the previous year, helping to boost cruise line expenditure by 11%. Also fuelling growth was a 10.3% rise in passenger capacity on homeported ships and an 8.8% increase in capacity on visiting ships, reflecting the increasing size of cruise ships in Australian waters. And it seems Kiwis are getting in on the increased offerings and opportunities. House of Travel general manager cruise Linda Halliday says plenty of Kiwis are buying cruises that depart from Australian ports. "Whether the cruise is to the South Pacific, to other Australian destinations or to Singapore or Hong Kong, it's proving to be very attractive to Kiwi travellers," she says.

... Top Destinations

In terms of popular Australian cruise destinations, the report says New South Wales had the highest number of cruise visit days (296) accounting for 35% of cruise visit days nationally; followed by Queensland with 253. Meanwhile, Victorian ports experienced an increase of 13 cruise visit days from 77 in 2013 to 90 in 2014; and the ports of Western Australia generated 101. South Australia had 31 cruise visit days; the Northern Territory had 29; and Tasmanian ports, featuring solely as transit ports, had 49 cruise visit days.

The End For Thai Tiger Temple?

Thailand's controversial Tiger Temple, where tourists can pose for photos with the big cats, is reportedly under threat after wildlife authorities refused to extend its expired zoo license.

The 'temple' has received widespread criticism for its treatment of the animals, as well as alleged links to wildlife trafficking, and officials are also concerned about its impact on Thailand's tourism.

Ten of the temple's tigers have been confiscated by authorities and sent to wildlife parks—a move which has been welcomed by World Animal Protection.

"We hope that this action will send out a clear message that the cruel exploitation of tigers in the name of entertainment must end," says a WAP spokesperson.

"Our own research has uncovered that at least 621 tigers are currently exploited for tourist entertainment in 10 venues across Thailand. We will continue our efforts to educate tourists to avoid these atrocious attraction because a once in a lifetime experience for tourists leads to a lifetime of misery for tigers."

The temple has reportedly denied the trafficking claims and is attempting to hold on to its tigers.

Agents: Resorts Looking Great; Fiji Needs Kiwis

Kiwi agents visiting Fiji as part of Tourism Fiji famils to the Mamanuca Islands and a Blue Lagoon Cruise are upbeat and pleasantly surprised by the way Fiji's resorts have bounced back post Cyclone Winston.

It's a delicate balance to acknowledge the losses suffered by the Fijian people and their communities, but also highlight how the island nation's tourism plant has worked swiftly to ensure its hotels and resorts are ready to welcome guests.

Some resorts are still out of action, but it's business as usual for the majority of Fiji's tourism operators.

Agents on the two famils say the resorts and hotels which they have visited 'are looking great' and that they will be happily booking clients to Fiji for their holidays.

"I had a lot of people who said to me why go to Fiji now and my answer was why not? This is the time when Fiji needs us most," says Hemal Jani from House of Travel Mt Eden, who is on the Blue Lagoon Cruise famil. "The Fijians have done a great job in cleaning up and I will be definitely telling my clients to visit here and take advantage of the low season rates..."

At the same time Samantha Milligan from the Travel Brokers is talking up the appeal of a Fiji Cruise. "A cruise through the Fijian islands has been a bucket list item for me and this week I have the chance! I like the small ship and that it is not crowded," she says. "The crew are already learning my name on arrival, the food is plentiful and the smiles too..."

there had been a cyclone here," she says, adding that she would have no hesitations sending clients to the island group. "It's amazing how quickly they have cleaned up the gardens, there is very little signs of debris anywhere."

Making a passionate plea for the people of Fiji, David Whitaker from Mondo World Travellers Motueka says it's important for Kiwis to keep travelling to Fiji. "...supporting the resorts means you are supporting the local villages. The resorts that are open still appear to be very busy which is a good sign for the country."
